The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Administration on Developmental Disabilities (ADD) will be holding a series of meetings over the next several months. During these

Envisioning the Future summits, ADD wants to hear from self-advocates, family members, allies and professionals about their vision for the future of individuals with developmental disabilities. Possible issue areas include transition to post-secondary education and employment, independent living, community supports, aging and caregiving challenges.

How can your voice be heard?

- Submit comments on the website. Through the collection of these comments, we can see trends in issues and concerns.
- Submit testimonies on the website. By submitting testimonies on the website, individuals can contribute to multiple topics rather than just one topic.
- Register to potentially present or attend the summit in person. In this case you will choose a life stage and share with us what will happen in the future or perhaps the future implications of existing conditions. We need your help looking into the future!
